

B&R for 7th February issue.

By Margot Hollingdale

At our last meeting, Deanna Leboff made a well-balanced presentation looking at the part played by the Suffragette movement in the battle for women to be given the vote. Under the leadership of Emmeline Pankhurst, their aggressive battle really didn't help the cause, but the patriotic hard work of women during The Great War was recognised and the more peaceful attitude of the long-standing Suffragist Movement did advance towards the intended goal.

In the afternoon, "Family History" members discussed the part that Artificial Intelligence plays in their research. David Mitchell continued his watery "Earth Science" series with a well-illustrated talk about the positive and negative features of dam constructions while "Aspects of History" discussed the Balfour Declaration of 1917.

Tomorrow, "Art Appreciation" and "Play Reading" will hold sessions, "Creative Writing" members are going to inspire us with the work they have been doing and Will Davies, Inspector for CADW will address the "Archaeology" Group.
