

B&R for 28th Feb issue

By Margot Hollingdale

We are looking forward to our proposed visit to St. Fagans National Museum of History in the summer, after an inspiring talk given by Gill Evans. In the afternoon, Mervyn Bramley presented the final six nominations for The Stirling Prize for Architecture 2023. We preferred an inner-city social housing complex and Warwick University but also approved of their choice of an all-inclusive, retirement day centre. There was a final play-reading of "Hobson's Choice" and another lively discussion on "Human Rights". The Art Appreciation Group enjoyed a second, well-illustrated talk by Corinne Thomas on stained glass windows and other colourful church embellishments.

Tomorrow, past Chairman of our u3a, Hugh Thomas, will present a musical morning entitled "Changes and Chances" and later John Tyler will lead a Science Q&A session, David Mitchell will give an explosive talk on "mass extinction" (of dinosaurs?) to his Earth Science followers, the Scrabble Group may be a quieter corner and the Poetry group will revel in Comic and Curious compositions.
